James Whitcomb Riley

By CHARLES EUGENE BANKS
 In Human Life

What, Jim, say no; it isn't true,
 We sha'n't get on a-mising you.
 The children would forget to play—
 Old fellow, don't go away.
 We'd feel the lonesomeness, I think,
 In every flower—how could we drink
 The fragrance of the morning breeze,
 And hear the music in the trees,
 Or through the meadows find our way—
 Why, brother, you've just got to stay.

You know the little talk we had
 One night when I was feeling sad;
 You said there were n't no sorrow then
 But what obeyed the laugh o' men,
 And proved your sayin' true and sweet
 By sittin' me upon my feet,
 Ah, many a time I've blessed that day—
 Say, Jim, you just can't go away.

Why, what would all the children do
 Come Christmas, with no word from you?
 And dear old Aunties, childless, lone,
 Without a home to call their own,
 Just boardin' round "unknown to fame,"

Hungry for one thing they can claim
 As theirs alone—What will they do
 If they should lose a-bold of you.

"Dear Lord," I hear the children pray,
 "Don't take our bestest friend away!"

James Whitcomb Riley is suffering from a stroke of paralysis. Physicians pronounce his case serious.
